Read the following passage and answer (Q. 70 - 74) :

Men have fought wars but mankind survived. This earth has survived the two world wars, but it may not be able to survive a third one. If man continues to behave politically, as they have behaved previously mankind will perish. The forces which push men into conflicts are very deep rooted since they have characterized mankind throughout the existence. The question is : how can we control these forces and subject them sufficiently to discipline to ensure human survival ?

Hatred and passions in human nature have corrupted human life throughout history and do so still. There are on the other hand in human nature, cravings for beauty, moral aspirations, love of fellow men and reverence for something greater than oneself in the universe. These creative impulses give warmth and colour to life's fabric, its richness, fullness and diversity; but suddenly some feeling overtakes us and these are suppressed and the more primitive impulses come to the surface.

Love of power and domination is like a wicked harlot that reduces men and nations and brings them down to their ruin. But unfortunately as a Cynic says, "One thing we learn from history, is that we learn nothing from it." What is wrong with the world is not 'matter', but it is the 'spirit' of man. Man is essentially a spiritual being. He is the frontier of mystery. If we rid ourselves of our lower passions and rise to our truer nature and implement this in our lives, the world will be a better place.
